An Astronomical Observation Circle at the Latitudes of the Maya World

This general observation circle would be accurate to within a small fraction of a degree throughout the Maya latitudes. From the center post, the solstices rise and set at forty degrees. The full moon rises and sets at the lunar standstills at sixty degrees.

The maximum rising and setting positions of the five planets visible to the naked eye are bounded by the solstices and the lunar standstills.

North, south, east and west inscribe a square within the observation circle and the lunar standstill positions, and north/south inscribe a hexagon within the observation circle.
