THE EARTH AS SUBSTANCE OF OUR DESTINY

The earth is our inherent home, it is the very substance of our destiny. Today, however, this existential fundament of life is shaking. How to solve the socio-ecological crisis, the central question of our time, has reached the center of global debate.

What is the contribution of the work inspired by Anthroposophy?

How to integrate the worldview that Anthroposophy introduced more than 100 years ago?

What can we learn from organizations and initiatives that contribute towards sustainable development out of Anthroposophy for decades?

These are some of the questions we will explore together in this online seminar.

COURSE COMPONENTS

The program of this five-day online seminar consists of:

- General introduction into the theme
- Introduction of Anthroposophy in relation to the socio-ecological crisis
- Outlines for understanding sustainable development
- Exploring concrete contributions to approach the socio-ecological challenges
- Integrated sessions with guest lecturers

ABOUT THE LECTURER

Johannes Kronenberg

With a background in Arts and Sustainable Development, Johannes Kronenberg (1991) has been working at the Goetheanum since 2019. He is active in project management, as a sustainability representative for the Goetheanum and as a research associate for the Agriculture Section. He is currently working on a research and compendium entitled "On the Earth we want to live", which gives insights into the contributions of the work with anthroposophy to sustainable development in the face of the socio-ecological crisis.
